23rd International Congress of the UIHJ

Bangkok (Thailand), 1st to 4th May 2018

Guaranteeing a secure and sustainable justice

The judicial officer, an essential element of good governance

The 23rd Congress of the International Union of Judicial Officers will take place from 1 to 4 May 2018. Historical Congress, since it will be held for the first time on the Asian continent, in Bangkok, Thailand. This is a sign of the tremendous development of our organization. Indeed, the UIHJ is a non-governmental organization created in 1952 by 7 European countries and today, more than 65 years later, it has 91 members or organizations, spread over four continents, associated by cooperation agreements which group together at world level organizations representing the profession of judicial officer and equivalent professions. It has an autonomous European branch, the European Union of Judicial Officers, comprising 25 member countries¹ subject to the same regional legislative and economic imperatives designed by the European Union.

Thanks to its unique expertise in the profession of judicial officer, it collaborates in various forms with major international organizations: World Bank, International Monetary Fund, Hague Conference on Private International Law, Cnudci, Ohada, Council of Europe, CEPEJ, European Commission, Institute of European Law, CEJA, Caribbean Court of Justice...

Within our organization the diversity concerning our profession coexist:

- Diversity of status (state, private);
- Diversity of legislation (Civil Law, Common Law).

It is therefore up to the UIHJ to work towards the harmonization of our profession thanks to the exchange of the best practices offered precisely by these differences which, far from being an obstacle, are on the contrary an asset. Today our profession is impacted by two visions of the world: globalization, digitization. Globalization is a process of internationalization of industrial, commercial and financial transactions linked to the liberalization of trade and its intensification. The UIHJ, by its object, accompanies quite naturally this process. Thanks to the unique knowledge of our profession throughout the world, the UIHJ forges tools that allow us to guide judicial officers wherever they are and regardless of the system in which they operate.

Thus was born the Global Code of Enforcement, the universal basis of the rules of enforcement of judicial decisions, fruit of the reflections carried out in 2006 at the International Congress of the Judicial Officers of Washington on enforcement without borders. The Global Code of Enforcement is an unparalleled tool for legal globalization that establishes an effective system of guarantees of legal and economic relations. Digitization refers to information and communication technologies that now reign over all kinds of exchanges. Economic growth goes hand in hand with these two notions. We will therefore associate these two notions in our work.

1 : 23 members and 2 observer members

In general, the congresses of the UIHJ are true platforms of exchange to which our colleagues from all over the world and the main organizations bring their reflections to work together to the evolution of the work of justice. In Bangkok, we will lay the foundations for building new tools by focusing our work around the theme:

“Guarantee a secure and sustainable justice
The judicial officer, an essential element of good governance”

Indeed, faced with the internationalization of trade, facing the digital revolution, which is a global phenomenon, judicial and economic actors need guarantees, proof to act with confidence. Legal technology (Legaltech) is disrupting the traditional practice of law. The delivery of legal services is changing. No one escapes this transformation, no more the one who provides the service than its beneficiary. One constant should remain: legal certainty and the trust it generates in institutions.

We will demonstrate that the judicial officer is the professional who, by his quality, his training, by the very essence of his function, can ensure the security of the economic and social relations and guarantee the maintenance of the balance of the rights of the litigants. The judicial officer acts within systems of good governance that are the only ones capable of ensuring fairness, transparency, accountability and information, core values of our profession.

Our challenge during this congress will be to answer three imperatives:

- Guaranteeing the information of the litigant and ensuring equal opportunities for all;
- Guaranteeing the responsibility of judicial and economic actors;
- Guaranteeing and securing digital tools: their use, their purpose.

We invite you to come and shape the answers with us. At the end of the works, the new board of the UIHJ will be elected and will present you the program for the coming term of office (years 2018-2021).

A congress is a powerful school of imagination. Come imagine our future in Thailand, the land of Smiles, in Bangkok, the city of Gods...

I look forward to the pleasure of seeing you there.

Françoise Andrieux
President UIHJ

Introduction

Guaranteeing a secure and sustainable justice

The judicial officer, an essential element of good governance

Good governance – a term that is unfamiliar to us, but is used regularly by international institutions such as the World Bank – is not so easy to define. In our research, however, we have found a definition that we find interesting: “Good governance is not a set of principles a priori, but is – like any architecture – a set of practices born of concrete challenges that societies must and which, little by little, “become a system” to allow the formulation of general principles (...)”². Good governance also aims “to make public action more effective, close to the public wellness and the general interest, and therefore more legitimate”³.

What is the role of the judicial officer who wants to be an essential element of good governance? If we focus first on this first definition and more specifically on the purpose sought by it, that is to say the formulation of general principles, no one doubts that the presentation of the World Code of Enforcement by the UIHJ in 2015 – which is a fundamental pillar for our profession worldwide – is an act of good governance, in which the judicial officer occupies a central place. The Global Code of Enforcement, which contains the definition of minimum global standards for enforcement, is essential to promote a fair and efficient enforcement system. In this, we immediately reach the second definition of good governance which consists of “making public action more effective, close to the public wellness and the general interest”⁴.

We will, throughout this congress, in the framework of the proposed workshops, not only show how the judicial officer can be an essential element of good governance, but also a guarantor; a guarantee of a secure and sustainable justice. As part of this mission, the emergence of new technologies plays a key role. It will not be up to the judicial officer to wait for the appearance of these and adapt. On the contrary, it is up to him to take the necessary initiatives to ensure and maintain his role as a leader in the field of enforcement, even if it is getting digitalized at a speed not to be underestimated.

The appearance of Blockchains is the best example. If we want to be the guarantor of secure information, we must take the lead and show active participation in the evolution of digital justice. Digitalised justice, which for many countries is certainly a new field, will certainly be a subject that will be of great concern to us in the near future and which will gain more and more importance in our debates.

This congress is therefore not only visionary, but also innovative. Innovative by its location and innovative by its concept. It is in fact for the first time in the history of the UIHJ that a congress is organized on the soil of the Asian continent. But it is also for the first time that the congress is preceded by written works that are published beforehand. Thus, the possibility is given to each country to express itself around a specific subject and contribute to the success of this major event that constitutes the congress. In addition, these written works constitute a well-defined basis for discussions to begin the debates in the various workshops presented at the Congress. These workshops are also innovative, in the sense that the “traditional” presentation of reports will give way to animated and dynamic round tables during which the public will have the opportunity to participate actively in the debates.

It remains for me to wish us some enriching work for our profession and a pleasant stay in Thailand, the land of smiles.
